

Management Commitment

ICE is a company specialising in control and monitoring systems for electrical networks. To ensure its long-term viability, it acquired several companies operating in related fields, thereby forming ICE Groupe, a federation of human-scale businesses benefiting from the strength and stability of a larger organisation.

Drawing on this group, made up of companies with diverse activities and expertise, ICE is continuing its operational developments by incorporating innovative advances.

To meet the ever-growing technical and technological needs of our customers, and in an economic environment that is constantly evolving with increasingly competitive markets, our sustainability and growth depend on our ability to adapt and to satisfy all our customers. With this in mind, we are broadening our range of products, systems, and services to address their emerging needs.

Management is committed to providing the resources and implementing the organisational changes deemed necessary for the quality-health & safety-environment manager and the process leaders, enabling them to achieve their objectives.

They must ensure that processes remain effective, appropriate, and aligned with the company's strategic direction. Only under these conditions will we be able to make progress across all the priority areas set out in our quality-health & safety-environment policy.

The commitment of management, the involvement of supervisors, and the active participation of all employees are the keys to our success.
